Re: FDA Raids

Dear Mr. Roads, Thanks so much for the excellent magazine! Sorry you must "hold back from publishing the juicy stuff" and that you've had to "terminate the series on the drug trade and Government + Security Agencies". Anywhere else we all can keep in touch with this?

Enclosed may be of interest.

Yours, Jonathan V. Wright, M.D., Washington. USA

(Readers may remember that in the June/July issue of Nexus we ran a news item regarding the FDA raid on a health clinic belong to Dr. Wright. The enclosed item he is referring to is a list of another dozen or so health clinics and businesses who have also suffered raids by the FDA. Ed)

Re: Banking Conspiracy?

Dear Sir, In reference to a recent story in Nexus about the Banking Conspiracy.

I can testify to the truth of the story, as it has happened to me! Up until about two years ago, I was what you might call a 'millionaire'.

I was independent in my business affairs, but a member of my family was in a great deal of debt due to his own foolishness, but to my horror, because I was mortgaged to the same bank, they came down on me.

The bank (C _ _ bank) demanded my whole debt to be repaid in full - immediately, I replied with a letter from my solicitor saying that they were in breach of contract, but they went ahead anyway, and just two weeks later they repossessed everything, even items on the property that they were not entitled to.

Since this was my home as well as my business, I was homeless and with all of my personal possessions taken from me.

They even had all of my money in a different bank seized and had my personal mail redirected to them.

In one day, I went from everything to nothing.

I was later declared Bankrupt by a creditor from my old business for a very small amount, the bank kept every cent and told everybody else to come to me.

The bank later sold my business for a fraction of it's value but still a hundred thousand over what I owed them.

But when I went to them for a refund of the balance they sent me a bill for $2,500.00 still owing.

I naively thought that I could revenge myself through the courts, but I was ripped off by solicitors who pretended to be working for me but in fact had done absolutely nothing.

I spent my very last cent on solicitor's fees and when that ran out I began to defend myself. It was then that while I was dealing with the same people that my solicitors had claimed to have been dealing with - I discovered that they knew nothing about me or my solicitors. My solicitors had just sent me bills for nothing.

And the humiliation did not stop there. Every second time I wrote out a cheque on my bank account from my dole money - it bounced, and each time the bank had a different excuse for doing it.

When it has become known that you are no longer a rich man, you discover who your friends are. I always believed that I was a popular fellow, with many friends, but now I have few friends and many enemies. People whom I thought a lot of and I thought generous and helpful, let me down at my time of greatest need, stating excuses of great silliness. When I walked down the street, instead of being greeted by many familiar and friendly faces, I was ignored like a stranger. My family, who I thought at least would be the same, changed. They treated me like an idiot and despised me for being poor.

In a way, I am pleased that it happened. I now know what a naive view I had of the world. And I am still young enough to rebuild, but this time it will be different.

Yours truly,

One Very Sorry Individual.

Re: US & Iraq

Dear Nexus, Whilst fishing the other evening, I had the fortune to meet a very nice man who originally came from Iraq. We discussed world events for some time.

It appeared to us that the world's economic system is in turmoil; the Governments either don't know what to do or don't really want to do anything constructive; and there appears to be a frightening amount of fighting taking place around the planet.

The man's brother is an engineer in the Iraqi army. His job is to supervise the maintenance of tanks and other equipment within a large area. Prior to the American attack on Iraq, there were a lot of US military advisors directing the Iraqi army on where to relocate their tanks away from the areas that were planned to be bombed.

The man's brother wrote to him about this rather strange event at the time. (Before the Gulf War). The tanks were taken to underground bunkers to protect them.

This doesn't sound so unbelievable when I recall that Saddam Hussein was educated in England and was later a well known member of the CIA.

Apparently he was an agent in the Middle East before leaving the CIA to begin his rise to power. How many people realise this, I'm not sure, but it is easily verified by reading some of the volumes written about Hussein by reporters and scholars during the war.

Re: Hydrogen Peroxide

Dear Duncan, As a new reader of your magazine, thanks to the publicity given to it by Brian Wilshire on his radio programme recently, I wish to compliment you on its contents.

I was particularly interested in the article on Hydrogen Peroxide as I have been using it now for over six months having been introduced to it by Brian's references to it in his book "The Fine Print". Incidentally, I have been a pharmacist for over 55 years and at the time I trained, 3% Hydrogen Peroxide had an official oral dose of 2ml to 8ml.

I note from your editorial that you have been experiencing computer problems and perhaps this accounts for the rather "garbled" dosage table on page 22 under the heading "Purging Schedule for 3% Hydrogen Peroxide". It would seem that two suggested schedules have been lumped together.

Could you please check your 'source' copy and advise me as to the correct dosage tables.

I enclose my application for a year's subscription and an order for back copies.

Yours Sincerely

Ernest W., Ashfield NSW
